Editorial Review

From School Library Journal
Grade 6–10—This companion novel (Bloomsbury, 2004) to Shannon Hale's The Goose Girl (Bloomsbury, 2003) provides a closer look at the emotional and physical struggles of 16-year-old Enna who discovers that she is able to burn at will. Can she control her power and use it help save the kingdom of Bayern from the attacks of neighboring Tira, and ultimately rid herself of its all consuming nature or will she, like her brother before her, become swept up by the fire's own dark need? This full-cast recording suffers from uneven narration. Some characters, and the full range of their emotions, are strongly portrayed, in particular the protagonist Enna. The consistently excellent voice of the background reader weaves its own spell and ties the cast and plot together. However, the simpering and grating voicing of Princess Isi detracts from the listening experience. Despite this flaw, fans of the first book will welcome the opportunity to learn more about Enna and her struggle to find her place in the world and will delight especially in the story's romantic resolution.—Cindy Lombardo, Cleveland Public Library, OH

From Booklist
Forest maiden Enna finds her kingdom in peril in this companion title to The Goose Girl (2003), also available from Full Cast. Enna’s friend Isi can control the wind, and Enna can control fire. Her gift comes with many perils as Enna struggles to allow herself to be consumed with the fire she creates. Her urge to burn is problematic. Musical interludes add atmosphere and mood to this full-cast production. Some of the actors’ voices are pitched similarly, but Cynthia Bishop, as the book’s narrator, keeps the action flowing even if her interjections into the dialogue occasionally are jarring. Chelsea Mixon reads Enna’s part with fluidity, and the entire ensemble cast, including such regulars as Daniel Bostick, Bruce Coville, Tamora Pierce, and Adam Wahlberg, are likewise fluent and smooth in their portrayals. Fans of the earlier title will be hooked. A welcome addition to audio collections. Grades 7-10. --Sally Miculek
