Editorial Review

From Booklist
Desiree is a medieval grifter. As a child she was sold to master thief Hubert Kabayn so her parents could pay taxes. Now Desiree is on her own after Hubert, her mentor, has been hanged as a murderer. She vows to make Nicholas Grimshaw, the shire-reeve of Kent, pay for his death. Nicholas, who with his bag of torture tools is feared by all, is actually kind to a fault. He promised to look after Hubert's "granddaugher," so he allows Desiree to move in and keep house for him. As the two antagonists try to live together, they also delve into why Hubert would have been framed, and Desiree tries to discover what the hidden key he had given her opens. Desiree and Nicholas both are sexy, interesting, and atypical characters whose unique story will enthrall readers, and McKerrigan's depiction of thirteenth-century Kent excites the imagination. --Diana Tixier Herald
